WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPTEM'R. 15, 1858

OPENING OF A MOUND. Mr. Robert Safford jr., says the Galliopolis, Ohio, Journal, has had in contemplation, for the past forty years, the opening of a mound that is on his farm, about two miles from this town, and last week be carried out his original intention. The mound is situated in the woods about a quarter of a mile from his dwelling, in a southeast direction, and the elevation is comething like six feet above the surrounding level, and about thirty feet in PERUVIAN GUANO diameter at the base.

Mr. S. commenced digging from the west side towards the centre of the mound, but encountering some heavy and rough stone, which seemed to have been imbedded there for ages, and difficult to remove, be abandon d that and dug from the east side in a direct line with the first out. He had not long progressed before he encountered the same diffioulty, which led to a more careful examination, when he discovered that he had struck pon a stone vault.

Having removed the key stone, which is PERUVIAN GOVERNMENT. upon a stone vault.

about twelve inches square on the top and tapering like a wedge to about three inches at the bottom, be had little difficulty in removing the remainder of the arch. The vault, for the first four or five feet from the top, was filled with a yellowish clay; intermixed occasionally with charcoal. About six feet down a layer of ashes was discovered in a good state of preservation, and beneath these was a layer of a substance about three inches in thickness resembling white clay, perfectly dry, and easily broken with the fit gers. In the centre of the vault, and imbedded in this clay, was found a stone about a quarter of an inch in thickness, and as large round as a tin cup, trimmed perfectly round and smooth. This stone was lying with the flat side down, as though to protect four strips of rolled copper which were found just beneath it, imbedded in a substance resembling cement.

These strips of copper are from three to six inches long by one and a half to two inches wide, and were found sticking endwice in the cement and pointing North and South. Two of these pieces are connected at one side like the binding of a book, and between them is an inset of delicately rolled copper, about three inches long and one and a ball wide, very much corroded. We examined these strips of copper with a microscope, but could discover no bieroglyphics except on one of them a perfectly formed branch of a tree, but whether accidentally formed by the process of decay and surrounding objects, or human hands, we are unable to determine. The copper is much corroded, and after the verdigris is removed by acids, there is a possibibility that these plates may throw some light on the heretofore hidden mystery-at what period and by whom were the mounds built.

The cement in which these plates were found extends below the surrounding level, and has been dog into to the depth of two feet. The vault is built of sandstone, and bears the appearance of having been subjected to a powerful heat, as the stones on the inside were burnt red. The stump of a large tree near the centre of the mound, which was cut a year or two since, indicates the age as nearly 400 years. It is the determination of Mr. Safford to resume the examination of this mound from time to time, as he may find leisure.

THE TELEGRAPH. A FATAL VOTE .- Now that everybody is praising those who favored the telegraph enpublic mind within the last fifteen years .-The Atlas says that the late Wm. J. Brown, of Indiana, used to tell bow he beat his Whig predecessor in Congress, because he voted Farming comm for an appropriation to aid in testing the diecovery. He charged on the stump, that his opponent "had voted to give twenty five thousand dollars of the people's money to a man who said he could send words over a wire by lightning, that the people of Indianapolis, living a thousand miles from the seat of government, could receive the proceedings of Congress instantaneously, and all this was to be done by lightning, and over market in the country. a wire; and for such a scheme, so impracticable and foolish, that his opponent had voted twenty-five thousand dollars of their money." The people were incredulous .-They did not believe it. Brown then called upon his opponent to answer whether the facts were not as he stated them. His opponent had to admit that they were, and he proceeded to explain the discovery, but the more be explained the more confused be became. He was besten, and Brown was chosen in his stead! That was the day of small things in telegraphing. What would have been thought of an appropriation by Congress at that time to aid in laying the telegraph wire across the Atlantic ocean? -The beginning and the end show that the world of mind keeps constantly advancing. It never stops and never grows weary.
